Adele Faber & Elaine Mazlish wrote a book called in 1986 called, How to Talk So Kids Will Listen and Listen So Kids Will Talk. This book has sold over three million copies. The following is advice the authors give parents to encourage cooperation and communication with children. Read through their advice and discuss your experience with such communication methods.

Dealing with a Child's Feelings

1. Listen quietly, with attention.

2. Acknowledge feelings with a word.

"Hmm.....I see.....Oh....."

3. Give the feeling a name.

"That sounds maddening"

4. Give in fantasy what you can't in reality.

"Wouldn't it be great if everyone in our house had their own private bathroom?"

To Enlist Cooperation

1. Describe what you see.

"There's a shoe in the middle of the floor."

2. Give information.

"The dog is chewing on the shoe."

3. Say it with a word.

"Shoes!"

4. Talk about your feelings.

"I'm upset that I paid good money on shoes the dog is destroying."

5. Write a note.

"Shoes need to be put in closets, away from dogs."
